Live ethical hacking

Vulnerability testing

As we've seen in recent months and even weeks, organisations in Australia are suffering at the hands of online adversary's. With breach upon breach, organisations need to stay ahead of the curve and keep well informed to ensure the safety of their people, processes and technology.

On the 26th of October, Waterstons Australia are due to hold their first live event called 'Hack and Sip', since opening their doors in Australia in early 2020. The event is going ahead as part of Australian Cyber Security Awareness Month (a global initiative), to bring awareness to the ever growing issue of Cyber Security which all businesses in Australia face at varying degrees.

The fully catered event will be held at The Foxhole (68A Erskine Street Sydney, NSW 2000) with happenings beginning from 4.30pm. Waterstons Head of Cyber Security, Ryan O'Kell will be fronting the hacking portion of the night, showing businesses how easy it is for an adversary with the right tools to infiltrate your systems, steal your data and ruin your organisations reputation.

Ryan also said this about the event: "We want people to join us for the event as Cyber Security shouldn't be made a priority after you've been breached, it's imperative that all organisations have a rock solid plan in place to ensure they don't get breached in the first place."

Waterstons Australia will also have key members of the team present on the evening to answer all your burning questions regarding everything Cyber Security and beyond.

Registrations are strictly limited and with a week to go, filling up fast.
