Managing IT in today's fast-paced technological landscape is challenging, especially for small or overstretched teams, leading to inefficiencies and vulnerabilities. To address this, many businesses turn to Managed Service Providers (MSPs) for specialised skills, 24/7 support, and tailored solutions.

But how do you choose the right MSP? Keep reading to find out what to look out for.

1. Are You Paying for Things You Don't Need?

When was the last time you looked at your service agreements (if you have one)? A great MSP should bespoke their services based on the unique needs of your organisation.

Be wary of providers who push unnecessary services or upsell you on things that don't add value to your operations.

Ensure the services you're paying for are aligned with your business goals and that you fully understand what you are paying for and why.

2. Quality of Customer Support

When you call your IT provider, do you feel genuinely supported?

High-quality customer service is crucial. Your provider should be responsive, empathetic, and effective in resolving issues.

3. Staying Updated with Tech Trends

Technology evolves rapidly, and your provider should keep you informed about the latest trends and advancements.

An excellent MSP will identify new technologies/ trends, notify the ones that are relevant to you and consult on whether it will add value to your business.

4. 24/7 Service Availability

Downtime doesn't stick to a 9-to-5 schedule, and neither should your IT support.

When considering which MSP to choose, ensure the provider offers a 24/7 service and what the service entails. Does it include proactive monitoring? Can you talk to a real person 24/7?

5. Client Testimonials

What do other customers say about the provider?

An excellent MSP will have a myirad of case studies and reviews to sink your teeth into! You can also ask around for feedback from other businesses who have worked with them.

6. Dedicated Account Manager

Having a dedicated account manager can significantly enhance your experience. You don't want to feel like just another client; you want to feel like a valued partner.

A great MSP won't just assign you an account manager; they will connect you with someone who becomes an integral part of your team. Over time, this person should feel like an extension of your own organisation, someone you can rely on for support and guidance.

7. Proactive Support

When was the last time your provider reached out with a proactive solution rather than just reacting to problems?

A good IT provider will not only monitor your systems but continuously address potential issues before they become major problems. As well as provide additional support where they can be of help.

8. Comprehensive Security Policies

Your provider should have stringent security policies to protect your data.

Inquire about their security protocols, how they manage data breaches, how they proactively stay ahead of threat actors, and their compliance with relevant regulations. It's crucial that your MSP follows robust and mature cybersecurity practices and is equipped to provide these services to you as well.

9. Range of Services

Does the provider offer a comprehensive range of services, or do you need to juggle multiple vendors for different needs?

A one-stop-shop MSP can streamline your IT management, offering everything from cybersecurity to cloud services. Having a partner who can provide a broad range of services is cost effective and provides peace of mind that you can always rely on that one vendor.

10. Adaptability and Scalability

As your business grows, your IT needs will change.

Ensure your provider can scale their services to match your growth and adapt to new challenges, ensuring long-term support and partnership.

By considering these ten points, you can ensure you choose an IT provider that truly meets your business needs and helps you stay competitive in today's fast-paced technological landscape.
